

*Above: Henry Head Carried, also known as Moves Out, wearing a horned weasel headdress. This noted leader was then holder of one of the original Beaver bundles, a very old and large one. It eventually spent some 80 years at the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, in New York City, before repatriation brought it back into the Blackfoot Confederacy in 2002.

John Head Carrier

From Suptd. Fred Campbell's 1921 notes

"The next allotment was that of John Headcarrier, age 43, a widower with 3 children, including a crippled daughter. His home is on White Tail Creek near Heart Butte. He has a one room log house, shingle roof and board floor. This is only fairly well furnished but enough furniture that they seemed to be comfortable.

Living in this home also was an Indian by the name of Old Rock. He has his own home near Aimsback on the Blacktail and plans on returning there to put in his garden and make his home. He is only living with Headcarrier to help put in his grain.....

Headcarrier plans on putting in his garden near his house and also stated that he would build a cellar and have it ready in time to take care of his garden supplies for the winter. He has two children at home attending the Heart Butte day school. He is a widower having lost his wife about four years ago. He has no cattle but has one team with which he farms, and one horse on the range."
